The Great Outdoors Preps For Kamp Adventures

It was peaceful on lake Cormorant. The birds were chirping as the waves slowly crashed on the uninhabited beach... until Kamp KACE arrived. They arrived in droves like locust with smiling faces and upbeat spirits. They greeted old friends with giant bear hugs and cackled like hens. The cattle herd began horsing around immediately talking about the upcoming week at Kamp KACE themed "The Great Outdoors!"

The adventure started with some ground rules about safety and everyone doing their best fish impression at the swim test. After that the entire Kamp played an orienteering game where they used compasses to traverse the grounds. Famished from their game in the meadow the hunting party tracked down a lion... actually a whole pack of Lions serving ice cream in the dining hall. Day one concluded with the first of many campfires to come complete with catchy songs that would be stuck in our heads the entire week.

The Great Campout

Each cabin will get a turn this week to get away from the stresses of camp and sleep in tents under the stars. A short trail hike will lead them to an oasis tent city complete with firepit and state of the art portable potties. The oldest cabins blazed the trail last night to test the facilities and food quality. At time of issue printing they are still unaccounted for, but we have faith their counselors will lead them back at any moment... we hope.

Big Foot Sighted at Kamp?

Multiple Kampers reported seeing a large, smelly, and hairy beast sneaking around by the dining hall last night. Witnesses assume he was still hungry even though the same sasquatch-like animal was seen getting a second helping at dinner. When questioned about his motives the primate responded "mvemsjump" through mouth full of food and ran off into the woods.

Ice cream coma hits Kamp KACE. They say this is only the beginning!
